> J. Collar's Christmas ad. appears in this issue of The Times. Mr. Collar is one of those merchants who believe in having and keeping everything of the latest and most approved style in his line of goods. True, it takes money and experience to carry a line of goods large and varied enough to supply the wants of such, a trade as he has, but this Mr. Collar is oundantly able to furnish. A look through his large and elegant establishment on Front street, reveals the fact that he has bought a stock-consisting of Organs, Pianos, Banjos, Guitars, Harmonicas, etc.; Parlor Suits, Bedroom Suits. Chairs of every known style and make, Pictures and Picture Frames in endless variety, and, in fact, everything in the furniture and musical line that there is likely to be a demand for .- which, for elegance, variety and prices, is seldom equalled and never excelled by any turniture house in southwestern Kansas. Mr. Collar has especially selected his stock for the holiday trade, and, if we are to judge by the busy scene which greeted our entrance to his store last week. he will have no trouble in disposing of his stock.
